

Name: _____

Date: _____

Natural English: Mastering Some, Any, and No

Quick Reference: Use some in positive sentences and polite offers/requests. Use any in open questions, negative sentences (don't have any), or positive sentences meaning "it doesn't matter which". Use no with a positive verb (have no...) to show zero quantity. Never combine not/don't with no.

Part 1: Grammar & Context Accuracy

Complete each workplace sentence with some, any, or no.

1. Would you like _____ coffee or water before we begin the meeting?

2. We have _____ budget left for business travel this quarter; the account is at zero.

3. You can schedule the interview for _____ day next week; my calendar is completely open.

4. I don't have _____ updates regarding the project status yet.

5. We noticed _____ interesting trends in the latest sales report.

6. Are there _____ dietary restrictions we should inform the caterer about?

Part 2: Avoiding Double Negatives

Each sentence below contains a common spoken error. Rewrite each sentence correctly using two different ways: one with no and one with not ... any.

7. "We don't have no available conference rooms today."

Option A (using "no"): 	Option B (using "not ... any"):
---------------------------------------	--

8. "There isn't no coffee left in the breakroom."

Option A (using "no"): 	Option B (using "not ... any"):
---------------------------------------	--

Part 3: Speaking & Roleplay Practice

Work with a partner. Take turns playing Speaker A and Speaker B. Formulate natural spoken responses using the targeted quantifier.

Scenario 1: Welcoming a Client

Speaker A: "Thanks for inviting me to your office."

Speaker B: Offer a beverage or a snack politely using some.

.....

Speaker A: Ask if they have internet access for guests using any.

.....

.....

.....

Scenario 2: Scheduling Flexibility

Speaker A: "When should we schedule our next review?"

Speaker B: State that they can pick whichever time works using any.

.....

Speaker A: State that on Friday afternoon you have zero availability using no.

.....

Answers

1. some (polite offer expecting 'yes')
2. no (positive verb have + no = zero quantity)
3. any (meaning "it doesn't matter which day")
4. any (negative verb don't have + any)
5. some (affirmative statement of indefinite quantity)
6. any (open question where answer is unknown)
7. Option A: We have no available conference rooms today. | Option B: We don't have any available conference rooms today.
8. Option A: There is no coffee left in the breakroom. | Option B: There isn't any coffee left in the breakroom.

Part 3 Model Responses:

Scenario 1: Speaker B: "Would you like some coffee or tea?" / Speaker A: "Do you have any guest Wi-Fi available?"

Scenario 2: Speaker B: "You can call me at any time that suits you." / Speaker A: "I have no free time on Friday afternoon."
